Beyond Belief Reality Rules. Volume 2 Clifton L. Fraser

In VOLUME 2 Fraser continues the crusade to discredit all religions with the sole purpose of ridding the world 'of the greatest scourge to ever have beset humanity'. Religious people see it as a hugely inflammatory statement. In addition to arrogant. And ambitious. Wildly so. But is it really? What is arrogant or inflammatory about finding the truth? It may be ambitious, but not wildly so. Isn't finding the truth an entirely normal, even mundane quest?

Fraser muses of how to go about persuading religious persons without offending the ones whose minds should crucially be reached: The deeply religious. It is difficult since people whose minds are sullied with religion seem impervious to reason and fact. He tries, not always with success, to:

- canvass minds, voices, votes.
- use logic and reason to persuade.
- convince, do not exhort.
- find consensus, avoid dissent.
- build confidence by eliminating spiritual insecurity.
- destroy demons by revealing reality.
- unmask the supernatural by scrupulously underwriting probability.
- avoid violence but do not discount it.
- unite ideas through demonstration not denunciation.

Fraser employs every possible avenue to reach sullied minds. He chances wry humour he knows is offensive, yet have found that if religious people are inherently honest and are made aware of Biblical anomalies, initially they're shocked as well, then laugh all the harder at them... as would a true God... were there one...

'How ignorant, Grand Master, You to have not mentioned China in the Holy Book even though its inhabitants were advanced way beyond those residing eventually in Canaan? How cruel of You to have the poor Israelites suffer forty years criss-crossing the desert while awaiting You to lead them to the Promised Land. Then as reward, You had them chuck out Canaan's original residents. Why? Is it not far wiser to rather have left them Canaanites alone? You really imagined You chuck them from their country will have them adore the Israelis? Short sighted, I wager, Sir. Almighty short sighted. But then I'm talking 20/20 hindsight. To be fair, seems empirical evidence supports that hindsight is more consistent than Prescience. Be that as it may, why did You not simply create Your Anointed a nice place of their own, for crying out loud? The Sahara is plenty big and plenty empty to the day; You just needed to tweak the weather a bit. On top, You'd have saved the globe the discontent still raging in the Middle East! Ever thought that one through, Sire? Didn't You see that one coming?

Creationists and the latest, more disingenuous exponent of that misguided cult, Intelligent Design, are unmasked, defrocked as poseurs. Fraser takes readers upon a personal exploration of Professor Michael Behe's controversial book Darwin's Black Box, exposing it for the utter falsehood it is. Aquinas's five postulates are dismembered, Ayn Rand dissected a bit further and holes are poked into the incongruities surrounding theist explanations why 9/11 happened.

As in VOLUME 1, hatches are forced open, holds are unbarred and shooting from the hip may seem the norm... only closer analysis increasingly indicates it's a sharp shooter on the loose.

'The fool says with his heart there is no God!'

Fraser's addendum is, 'and the wise with his brain.'
